ひらがな SENTENCE PRACTICE

The rules for writing sentences in Japanese characters are different from the rules for writing sentences in roomaji.

(1) Particles

Most particles are written with the hiragana character for that particle's sound (ni: に; de: で; ga: が; etc.), but the following three are written using different characters from the original sound. Pay attention to them.

Particles: wa: は (not わ) e: へ (not え) o: を (not お)

(2) Spacing

Since particles connect to the word preceding them, you do not make a space between the word and the particle, unlike when you write sentences in roomaji. Similarly, the copula です does not have a space before it and the preceding word. Study the following examples.

Watashi wa Chuugoku jin no gakusei desu. Mainichi gakkoo e ikimasu. Gakkoo de Nihongo to keizai o benkyooshimasu.

わたしは ちゅうごくじんのがくせいです。まいにち がっこうへ いきます。
がっこうで にほんごとけいざいを べんきょうします。

Note: Since the particle 'の' has a strong nature of 'belonging' to the word before and after it, you may leave no space between the words as in the example above. The particles 'と' or 'や' can be treated in the same way, since they connect nouns and indicate their equal relationship. In more advanced written Japanese, with the use of kanji, you will see fewer spaces.

(3) Punctuation

Just as in English, the Japanese language has a period and a comma. However, they look different in Japanese. Also, pay attention to the position of the punctuation marks, especially when you write sentences vertically. They go on the right hand side as shown below.

Japanese period (。) Japanese comma (、)

You use a Japanese period when you finish a sentence written in Japanese characters. A period is also used at the end of a question. No question mark is needed because the sentence particle か shows that the sentence is a question, basically.

The rules for using the Japanese comma are flexible in terms of making spaces, and depend on which characters you are using, kana or kanji.

Two basic rules you can apply at this stage are:

(A) Use a comma after 'はい,' 'いいえ' and other words with the same or similar meanings, like 'ええ' and 'まあ.'

(B) Use a comma after the words for connecting sentences, such as 'そして,' 'でも,' or 'が.'

Finally, you should make a one-character size space between the punctuation mark and the next character. Spaces between words and sentences are also one-character sized.

あした かいしゃに いきますか。
いいえ、あしたは やすみです。でも、あさって いきます。

あした かいしゃに いきますか。
いいえ、あしたは やすみです。
でも、あさって いきます。
